IN MEMORIAM.

In the death of Charles Keith, who was laid to rest yesterday, a large circle of friends and acquaintances will feel a great personal loss.

Gracious, courteous, even-tempered, the sunshine of his presence was always a benediction. His unflinching thoughtfulness for the happiness of those about him, his unselfishness and high sense of honor, his quiet sense of humor and his innate modesty endeared him to all who knew him even casually.

Like all of us he had his weaknesses and like all of us he suffered for them, but he leaves behind him a reputation for spotless integrity and chivalrous gentleness that should be a constant consolation, a sweet memory for those who mourn his home-going.

For him the battle of life with its triumphs and defeats, its hopes and fears is over; the peace that passeth understanding is his. The sorrow and heartbreak of life's last tragedy are for those who still live, but for them remains the comfort, slight though it may be, of the thought that in all his life he wronged no man, and all of the hundreds who called him friend mourn his absence.

THE TREASURY DEFICIT.

Among various expedients proposed to meet the growing treasury deficit is that of reviving some of the internal revenue taxes that were put on during the Spanish-American war. If it is adopted we wish the Republican administration much joy in its experience. We venture to predict for it a much less enthusiastic reception than that accorded the plan when it was utilized for war purposes. The former levy was a direct appeal to the loyalty and patriotism of the public, which responded immediately and cheerfully, with no thought of party lines, but merely with the one idea of aiding the government to meet the common enemy.

But the imposition of a similar tax to help the Republican party out of the hole into which its reckless extravagance has plunged it would be a vastly different proposition. We are of the opinion that the public would view with sour disapproval the prospect of reaping the crop of wild oats sown by the Republican party. And we are of the further opinion that this expedient will not be adopted. The result could scarcely fail to be painful to those responsible for the deed.

DIVISION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

Reference was made a day or two since to the proposition to divide Pennsylvania for the purpose of removing the people of the western portion of the state from the influence of the corrupt Philadelphia gang. Among the advocates of division is former Governor William A. Stone, who outlines his plan to the Philadelphia North American and gives his reasons for favoring the creation of a new state.

Mr. Stone would divide the state along the line of the Susquehanna river, which would constitute a natural boundary for a great part of the distance north and south. This division would give the new state, which Mr. Stone would call "West Pennsylvania," about twice the area of the other portion of the state as it now exists, but it would divide the population almost equally with about 2,000,000 inhabitants for each state, which would entitle each to the sixth place in rank.

Another plan, suggested by the Pittsburgh Leader, contemplates dividing the state along the ridge of the Alleghenies. This would make the two states of about equal area, but would leave about 4,000,000 of population in the old state. The anthracite deposits would be in the old state and the bituminous deposits and the iron manufacturing in the new. Division along this line was predicted by Abraham Lincoln, who suggested the name "Allegheny" for the new state, according to Harper's Weekly.

But, while differing as to boundary and name, the advocates of division appear to be united as to reasons for the separation. Mr. Stone gives them in the following paragraph: "Philadelphia's political machine to-day absolutely controls every political position in Pennsylvania, and division of the state would confine to smaller territory the political tribute in support of this machine."

Mr. Stone advances no new thought when he says in further outlining his plan: "Such a machine as this, which holds in subjection all the various parts of the state, is a menace to republican institutions." The menace has long been admitted. The real problem that confronts western Pennsylvania is to devise means of escape. Consent of the entire state must be secured before the division can be made and the opposition of the machine must be overcome. The machine will not willingly suffer a loss of territory, so the problem is the old one. Mr. Stone does not suggest a plan to defeat the machine.

which must be overthrown before western Pennsylvania can be emancipated. A natural query is whether, with the machine beaten, the reasons for division would disappear. The answer is no. While the immediate argument for separation would be met by the overthrow of the present machine, other reasons exist. Philadelphia, with its immense population, would continue to be the dominant political factor in the state, a condition that would be scarcely less distasteful to the people of the western portion than their present humiliating position. They seek escape from Philadelphia.

TWO TRADE DILEMMAS.

A boycott of American goods by the merchants of Shanghai is not a matter of great importance by itself, but taken in connection with other expressions of dissatisfaction with American methods it is rather disquieting. So far as Shanghai is concerned the trade of the Chinese empire is something the United States cannot afford to lose. The European countries are giving American merchants a good race in the Orient as it stands and the action of the Shanghai merchants is probably a good index to the general feeling in China toward the United States. Official action by the Chinese government along the line of that taken by the Shanghai merchants would be felt by American exporters.

In connection with the trade situation as it relates to China and the United States it should not be forgotten that the United States must be prepared to sacrifice a part of its commerce, if necessary, rather than to permit China to frame the Chinese immigration laws for this country. The present anti-American feeling in China is the direct result of the failure of this government to remove restrictions from the law governing the admission of Chinese. In endeavoring to placate the offended Chinese merchants the great issue at home must not be overlooked.

The Chinese, however, buy little from us except those things they must have and cannot produce at home. Of vastly more importance is our trade with Germany, which promises to suffer unless the United States makes certain concessions to the German exporters. While indicating a willingness to enter into reciprocal trade relations with this country the German government has recently made it plain that it has become tired of making concessions to the United States without receiving adequate returns. While the German government's policy does not meet with universal endorsement at home, because of a fear that it will provoke a disastrous tariff war, there is every reason to believe Germany has decided to enforce retaliatory trade measures that will not fail to have an adverse effect on American commerce unless the United States accedes to some of Germany's demands.

While the dissatisfaction in China and Germany arise from wholly different causes, the two, considered together, constitute a general condition that may result in a serious blow to the export trade of the United States.

SCHWAB A DIPLOMAT.

Charles M. Schwab, captain of industry, who has just been soliciting orders for battleships in St. Petersburg, is quoted as assuring a prominent Russian that the American people "have the friendliest of feelings possible for Russia, and that a victory by Admiral Togo over Rojestvensky's fleet would grieve America as much as it would the Russians."

We do not insult Mr. Schwab's intelligence by treating this as his sincere belief. To say Mr. Schwab believed that would be to pay his powers of observation a mighty poor compliment. We do not mean to say Russia has no friends in America, but we do say a Russian defeat would cause less grief here than in Russia. Moreover, Mr. Schwab knows this. Hence, we are forced to the conclusion that he is simply talking for confusion effect. Mr. Schwab has been brought up in that commercial school which teaches "get the business," and he evidently is after the business.

But think of telling a thing like that to the unsuspecting Russians! A publication of timely importance is entitled "Panama," and is part I, section 27 of the Foreign Commercial Guide issued by the Philadelphia Commercial museum. The book is a part of a series covering the far east and South America and issued by the same organization. The Panama monograph is an atlas, law digest and commercial guide combined that should be of value to all who are interested in the state through which the great canal is now being dug. In addition to a map and description of the country it contains rules of banking and exchange, postal and cable rates, official directories, rules of court procedure, customs duties, rules governing licenses, patents, trade marks, etc., with an article relating to the resources of the country.

"The secret of Paderewski's wonderful playing is that he throws his soul into his music," asserts a musical critic. This possibly explains how he injured his neck and also locates his soul.

The Washington Post sagely suggests that Togo may have decided to let the two Russian fleets get together, so he will have to fight only one battle instead of two.

Evidently some of the excursionists were unable to get away from the dear old "question" of Utah, even when on a pleasure trip to Los Angeles.

To date in the controversy between Mr. Cleveland and Miss Anthony, the latter has had the woman's privilege of the last word.

Everything appears to be going according to precedent at Portland. The rival commissions have locked horns already.

May Day in Russia is pronounced a "fiasco." Order reigned everywhere.

Meanwhile, Manager Reilly will proceed to "strengthen up."

Society.

Miss Daisy Harroun and Dr. A. C. Behle were quietly wedded at 5:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the presence of a few immediate relatives by Dean J. B. Eddie. The ceremony took place at St. Mark's cathedral and immediately after the couple left for the coast to be gone about two weeks. The wedding, coming at a surprise to the friends of Dr. Behle and his bride, while the engagement had been announced some time ago, was for the ceremony. There were no attendants yesterday and only a few of the nearest relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. George Whipple will leave during the week for their home in the east. Mrs. Whipple has been the winter with her daughter, Mrs. O. W. Powers, and Mr. Whipple has been here for the past few days, having come out to accompany her home.

GREEKS ARE MASHERS

West Side Foreigners Annoy Women and Girls—Victim Slaps One in Face.

Complaint has been made of the advances which are being daily made to women and girls passing on West Second South street, near the Rio Grande depot, by Italian, Greek and Austrian laborers, who congregate on the sidewalk and annoy those of the opposite sex.

So insulting have the remarks and actions of the foreigners become that at least two girls went to school yesterday followed shortly by a male protector, whose avowed purpose was to beat any molesters. Several of the foreigners made remarks to others of their race regarding the young women, but as neither girl was personally addressed the expected till did not develop.

The Greeks hang about in front of the saloons and stores on the south side of West Second South, between Fourth and Fifth South streets. Where they are numerous it is often the case that pedestrians are crowded off to the curbings. The girls and teachers, some attending the West Side High school, are not alone the victims of this habit by logic. Leon Skirris and other well known Salt Lake Greeks took immediate steps when notified last night of the situation, and the opinion that the Greeks were by no means wholly responsible.

BETTER STRAWBERRIES IN

Wholesalers Register Kick at San Francisco and Effect Is Noted—Result of Crusade.

Salt Lake wholesalers have given San Francisco shippers to understand that the law will no longer permit them to sell over-ripe and discarded strawberries and raspberries in this city, and as a result Salt Lake will get better berries for the money from now on. This move on the part of the local wholesalers became necessary owing to the vigorous crusade against poor stock by City Food Inspector J. J. Moyers.

The early part of the last week the food inspector got busy and in one day condemned 200 cases of strawberries. Later, some of this stock was passed out via side-doors to peddlers, and by them hawked through the streets. Altogether 200 cases of berries were ordered destroyed during the week.

The retailers themselves were not responsible and decided to go to the root of the trouble. As a result some of the wholesalers' protest to the coast. The California shippers were wired Saturday and the effect was noted yesterday. Every store showed much cleaner berries than were on sale Saturday, and at the same price, they cost for 25 cents.

There were no new features to yesterday's market, other than the above.
